Here is a code I am trying to compile and it is giving the following error - ep.c:3:5: error: 'char' does not name a type I am using XCode 3.2.5 #include int main() { char *s=NULL; char s[18]={0,0,0,0,0,0}; s=s1; printf("%c",*s); return 0; } What is the issue here? Thanks. A: You cannot have multiple declarations for a single variable. In particular, you cannot have two declarations for the same variable that both have the same name. If you think about it, it would be impossible for the compiler to know that it could interpret both declarations. Therefore, it will only know that it can interpret one and nothing else, and will have to assume the other declaration is invalid. To resolve the ambiguity, the compiler will either accept the first declaration or will not accept any of the declarations. As such, for the compiler to be able to compile your program, you must choose which of the declarations to use. In your case, you should include the first one, as the second one is not legal. You could also choose to include none of the declarations, by explicitly stating that you don't want any of the declarations accepted. The Daoist humoral theory. The theory of the five elements—earth, water, fire, wood, and metal—which forms the basis of the Chinese medical science of Daoism is reviewed. Its practical application was derived from a profound recognition of the importance of bodily hum 82157476af
